Caruso Sings Samson Cautiously

No Trace of Recent Injury in His Voice as He Appears With Mme. Matzenauer.

Enrico Caruso sang to his second great audience at the Metropolitan last evening since he had the misfortune to burst a blood vessel in his throat while singing in "I/Elisir d'Amore" in Brooklyn last Saturday night. Cast with Mme. Margarete Matzenauer in the title roles of "Samson et Dalila," the famous tenor received much applause during the evening. His superb voice was again in good condition although he seemed to spare it somewhat, especially in the first act. His impersonation of Samson on the whole was, as ever, one of his most artistic achievements.

Advice for Buyers of Silk Shirts Who Are Looking for Jobs.

To The New York Herald: Speaking of mottoes on coins of long ago I have one issued by Walsh's general stores in Lansingburg in 1835. On one side it has a plough and the sentence "Speed the Plough, it feeds all."

This should apply to any number of able bodied Americans who during the world war flocked into the cities for more lucrative employment, but who now find themselves minus a job after spending their easily gotten money for silk shirts and kindred finery. If conditions then warranted the speeding of the plough how much more now is the need of it when starving millions of humans are crying for succor from us? J.B.
